

Improv for family fun and connection

Join us to learn simple improv games for families to support fun, togetherness, and connection. Laugh and get creative while helping your kids learn how to tune into others, be flexible, identify emotions, and support one another.

We will use semi-structured games and activities to allow parent and kids to explore different ways of being playful together in a judgement free zone. Parents have the opportunity to learn ways to incorporate these games into their daily lives!

Our therapists have years of improv experience and will share specific activities, along with ideas about how to adjust them to best suit your family and child. Not to ruin the fun, but there is actual research demonstrating that improv supports the development of social skills. No improv experience necessary, just willingness to try something new.
